ity in such matters; but it strikes me that any objection to the above expression savors of hypercriticism. We all say "Morton is an Indiana senator"; "Withers is a Virginia senator"; "Gordon is a Georgia senator"; "Lamar is a Mississippi representative." At the same time we say "Morton is an Indianian,"

There are many expressions not exactly justifiable according to the strict rules of grammar, yet they have passed into idioms. To say that "Gordon is a Georgian senator and Governor Smith an old Virginian gentleman" would be affectation of nicety, not strict adherence to usage.

The Christian and the Saracen. To the Editors of the Dispatch :

I have to-day read "B's." remarks in reference to my letter. I presume the reason Lord Derby has not answered the communication from St. Petersburgh is that he considers actions speak plainer than a dispatch. It appears to be well understood in Europe that ever since the Crimean war, which had for its object Russia's conquest of Turkey, Russia has never abandoned that design; but has, in numerous instances, shown her object, and in various ways been preparing.

In regard to cruelties, "B." refers to a state of warfare (when the worst passions of men are let loose, and murder, and cruelties committed on a large scale against those who never offended each other, and are applauded by civilized Christians), whereas I referred to a state of peace. So did Russia when she complained of Turk. did Russia when she complained of Turkish rule; and, likewise, the conference assembled to try and arrange for an improved Turkish government in their provinces. (1 have not yet seen it reported that the conference entered into the subject of the horrible cruelties committed by the Turkish

I would have been glad if "B." had given some reason for thinking England's interest beyond what I stated. He simply denies mine, without furnishing any proof. I might refer him to England, after expending millions of dollars improving the Ionian Islands, quietly withdrawing when the wish of the people was expressed; to her evacuation of Abyssinia after its conquest; to her offers to Canada, etc., etc. Yours truly, Russia and Turkey. Editors of the Dispatch: As Russia and Turkey seem bent upon having their tight out at my cost, it may prove profitable to us to take a look at one of these countries from a geographical standpoint. Such a consideration of Russia would at least have the exciting condition of affairs in our own country. The Russian and the Turk are natural and national enemies; their hatred has long been hereditary. Such a fact in itself is worthy of remark; for when a whole people keeps on doing the same thing for generations and centuries there is apt to be some other cause than national prejudice, or even national energy, impelling that people. If we go down deep enough, there is generally a national necessity discoverable which shapes the course of the popular mind. And that this is true of Russia a brief examination of that country's seacoast abundantly illustrates. Let us turn to the map of Europe and see at a glance this one reason why Russia is traditionally and inevitably hostile to Turkey. If we begin at St. Petersburgh, in the northwest, we find a small bay leading into the Gulf of Finland, and thence out into the Baltic sea; and it was his reliance upon this narrow sheet of salt water which prompted Peter the Great, not quite two centuries ago, to found his capital just above it in the marshes along the banks of the Neva—a capital destined to be one of the world's greatest commercial centres, as the strong-willed Czar fondly boped. But the ice blocks its harbor every fall and all the ice blocks its barbor every fall and all through the long winter, and renders vain such expectation, in spite of its half-million PLE and FANCY GROCERIES at prices to suit the times. [oc 24] JOHN E. MORRIS & CO. of inhabitants. On the north, it is true, there is a long reach of coast, but it is the coast of the Arctic ocean, where old Boreas blows his chilly blasts with such effect that he drives the hardy Laplanders themselves to snooze away the winter in their horrible little hovels. On the east we are stopped by the Ural mountains. And yet we see that having traversed with invincible energy this natural barrier, the Czars and their subjects sought sea-water across all the marshy steppes and wind-swept plains of barren Siberia, across the whole continent of Asia, only to find it at last at an immense distance on the bleak shores of the ses of on hand for farmers' use.

As to the Caspian sea, in the southeast, its waters are of small avail, being absofullely cut off from all but local trade. Turning our eyes West again, we find Russia hemmed in by Prussia, with Austria and far around to the Southwest; and so passing around to the South, we come at last to the Black sea, and there in full view, as it were, of Sebastopol and the whole Crimes, lies Russia's true highway to the commerce of the world—the Bosphorus. An immense natural aqueduct, the Bosphorus receives from the Black sea the waters of Russia's great rivers, and bears them in a strong, swift is 11-11. great rivers, and bears them in a strong, swift current to the Sea of Manuors, where they spread out and smile again with "laughter infinite" in that bright sunshine, and then pass more slowly on through the Dardanelles into the Mediterranean, there to become veritable cosmopolitans. Russians naturally think that Russian ships and Russian commerce should float freely out to sen through these same channels. But the Turks, who hold both ends and both shores of the Bosphorus, and of the Dardanelles, too, have, on the other hand, their own con-

We have made a chemical examination of DAVID F. CLEMMER'S MOUNTAIN RYE WHISKEY, using for the purpose samples selecte by ourselves from ten barrels belonging to lots re-ceived by Messrs. George A. Hundley & Co. a different times, and of ages varying from one to four-teen months. We have subjected this whiskey to the most scarching tests. It has stood them all perfectly, nothing of a deleterious nature being found in it. It can therefore be confidently recommended for its purity and excellence to those who use whiskey as a beverage, while for medicinal purposes it is all that can be desired.
